A Flicker of Steel isn't a bad book. I'd even say it's a good book, though I'm torn between 3 and 4 stars. But it just has too much going against it when compared to the rest of the series. First, the characters. I just didn't really connect with them.

Corroded steel rails effortlessly slice through the impressive rolling mountains, as miles of hopper cars loaded with black gold seemingly hover above glimmering silver as the sun strikes upon the exposed steel rails. Ragged and tired wooden railroad ties, remain brown as the foul water which flows beneath endless looming trestles.

She's ready to fight, but the next battle will be her greatest test yet. The forces of Avalon are growing ever stronger, reinforcing their dominance with almighty displays of brutality. When Abaddon comes close to crushing Layla and her friends, it's clear that the thunder of war is about to give way to lightning—and that they have no chance of surviving it alone. The final battle against Abaddon is drawing closer. Now Layla and her friends must fight for themselves—and the future of the world. To win, they will need every power and ally they can muster. But even with all their strength, will it be enough to stand against the impending doom?

Violent, angry, and hell-bent on revenge, they have Hellequin firmly in their sights. And if he won't come willingly, they'll take those closest to him first. The battle begins again.
