Cut the Crap is the sixth and final album by The Clash, released in 1985. It's also the one that the band doesn't like to talk about, and not without good reason: the album was heavily plagued by poor production and a ton of infighting, and tanked so hard as a result of these tense circumstances that Joe Strummer was reportedly depressed and demotivated enough to call it quits with the Clash in 1986, not long after its release.
